

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Before the law went into affect, I would receive a minimum of 9 calls in an evening which were unwanted. I would come home to my answering machine at it's limit from hang up sales calls or computerized "dummies" trying to sell me something. Before this law went into effect, I would let my answering machine answer every call to avoid being pressured by a salesman. "I", the consumer pay a monthly fee to have a phone in my home for "my" use and I give the number to those people I wish to talk to. I do not pay a monthly fee so that I can be harassed during dinner or have someone interrupt my precious time with my family in the evenings. Please do not allow Indiana's law to be changed!
